WERGIN, J

GRADUATE STUDENTS ONLY

This short course will focus specifically on the act of teaching. Graduate education in this country has only recently begun to address college teaching issues. While mastery of the discipline and of the research skills necessary to contribute to that discipline have long been a staple of graduate training, mastery of the knowledge and skills necessary for teaching the discipline are often neglected.

GRADUATE STUDENTS ONLY

Prerequisites: GRAD 602 and 606. Designed for students planning to enter careers as faculty in professional schools. Covers the pedagogical methods common to the professions but distinct from liberal arts disciplines. Topics include: teaching and learning professional expertise; teaching styles appropriate to the fields of social work practice, target populations, overview of social work methods. Includes observation, collection and description of data, verbal and nonverbal communication and the relevance of the above to social work practice. Integrates issues of human diversity in all course content. Emphasizes the demonstration and practice of communication through structured exercises.

GRADUATE STUDENTS ONLY

Corequisite: GRAD 605. Provides graduate students an opportunity to gain experience and practice in clinical/field/studio instruction, under the tutelage of a senior faculty mentor. This course will be taken in lieu of the current GRAD 603 Externship in College Teaching, which is intended primarily for future faculty aiming for careers in the liberal arts and sciences. To qualify, future faculty must have completed GRAD 601-605 successfully. Students will be assigned to a faculty mentor and the two will negotiate a learning plan based upon the future faculty member's career goals. Assigned responsibilities might include "shadowing" the mentor as he/she performs daily professional tasks; taking on certain instructional responsibilities with supervision; engaging in professional service; or collaborating on research projects with instructional potential. Whatever the negotiated work turns out to be, the future faculty member will take on the role of "junior colleague" or "graduate assistant" or "teaching assistant." The program director will monitor all learning plans for adherence to this general standard. GRAD 606 is meant to replace GRAD 603 if a student is pursuing the PRP course certificate. Graded as pass/fail.
